I am deeply passionate about solving the disparity in agricultural supply chains—specifically, increasing farmers' income by reducing the number of middlemen in the process.
What draws me to this problem is seeing firsthand the huge gap between the low prices farmers receive at regional mandis and the high rates consumers pay in cities. I recently came across data showing that smallholder farmers in India often receive as little as 15% to 20% of the final retail price, and it made me think more seriously about why this inefficiency persists and how technology can fix it.
I believe this matters because millions of... more
